I started work at 9.00 am this morning. I checked my emails and calendar as soon as I arrived. I noticed that I had a meeting booked for 10.15 am. I checked the paperwork that I needed was all in order. Once I completed this task I took the papers and a few pens to the car.

The meeting was at a day centre where I supported some of the people attending the service to complete a questionnaire, and this took an hour to complete. Once I was back in the office I put the July Health Ebulletin together. I emailed it to my work colleague for feedback. It was then lunchtime.

After lunch, I checked my workload and realised that I had a few minutes to spare. I took the time to write my blog. I then went online to check out an updated company policy.
